Rapid Induction

What is Rapid Induction?

Rapid induction is a technique used in hypnotherapy to quickly guide someone into a state of hypnosis. It's called "rapid" because it happens faster than traditional methods. Hypnosis is a state of focused attention and increased suggestibility, often used for therapy and relaxation.

How Does Rapid Induction Work?

1. Preparation:

"The hypnotherapist prepares the person by explaining what will happen and ensuring they are comfortable and willing to proceed."

2. Focus of Attention:

"The hypnotherapist asks the person to focus on a particular point, object, or sound. This could be a spot on the wall, a light, or the therapist's voice."

3. Shock or Surprise:

"A sudden, unexpected action or word is used to jolt the person's mind into a state of heightened suggestibility. This might be a quick hand movement,a clap, or a loud command."

4. Deepening:

"Once the person is in a state of hypnosis, the hypnotherapist usescalming words and suggestions to deepen the state, making the person more relaxed and focused."

Examples of Rapid Induction

Here are a few examples to illustrate how rapid induction can be done:

Example 1: The Handshake Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist explains the process and ensures the person is ready.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist offers a handshake.

3. Shock or Surprise: As the person takes the therapist's hand, the therapist suddenly pulls the hand slightly, says "Sleep!" and gently lowers the hand.

Example 2: The Eye Fixation Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist talks to the person about the process and ensures they're comfortable.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist asks the person to focus on a spot on the wall or a light.

3. Shock or Surprise: After a few moments, the therapist might say, "Now, close your eyes and go deeper," with a sudden change in tone.

4. Deepening: The therapist continues with calming suggestions, like "Imagine yourself floating down a gentle river, feeling completely at ease."

Example 3: The Arm Drop Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist explains what will happen and makes sure the person is ready.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist lifts the person's arm and asks them to focus on how it feels.

3. Shock or Surprise: The therapist suddenly drops the arm while saying "Sleep!" in a firm but calming voice.

4. Deepening: The therapist follows up with, "Feel yourself going deeper into relaxation with each breath."

Example 4: The Arm Levitation Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist explains what will happen and ensures the person is ready and comfortable.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist asks the person to extend one arm straight out and focus on it.

3. Suggestion and Movement: The therapist suggests that the arm will begin to feel lighter and start to rise. As the arm starts to lift (or with a gentle nudge from the therapist), they use the moment to say, "As your arm rises, you go deeper into relaxation."

4. Shock or Surprise: At the peak of the lift, the therapist might suddenly lower the arm and say, "Sleep!" or "Relax deeply!"

5. Deepening: The therapist continues with suggestions for deeper relaxation, "With every breath, you go deeper and deeper into relaxation."

Example 5: The Magnetic Fingers Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist explains the process and ensures the person is comfortable.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist asks the person to hold their hands out in front of them, palms facing each other, and fingers spread apart.

3. Suggestion: The therapist suggests that the fingers have powerful magnets that will pull them together. "Imagine powerful magnets in your fingers, pulling them closer and closer together."

4. Movement: As the fingers start to move together, the therapist uses this as a cue, "As your fingers touch, you will enter a deep state of relaxation."

5. Shock or Surprise: Once the fingers touch, the therapist might say, "Now, close your eyes and sleep deeply," while gently pushing the hands down.

6. Deepening: The therapist continues with suggestions for deeper relaxation, "Feel yourself sinking deeper and deeper with every breath."

Example 6: The Falling Back Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist ensures the person is comfortable with the process and explains what will happen.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist asks the person to stand and relax.

3. Suggestion: The therapist suggests that as they feel the therapist's hand on their back, they will start to feel relaxed and ready to fall back safely.

4. Shock or Surprise: The therapist gives a gentle push on the person's back while saying, "Relax and let go!" and catches them gently as they fall back.

5. Deepening: Once the person is safely caught and relaxed, the therapist continues with suggestions, "As you feel my support, you relax deeper and deeper."

Example 7: The Eye Lock Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist explains the process and ensures the person is ready.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist asks the person to close their eyes and focus on the feeling of their eyelids.

3. Suggestion: The therapist suggests that the eyelids are getting heavier and heavier, "Your eyelids are becoming so heavy, so relaxed, that they just won't open."

4. Shock or Surprise: The therapist might say, "Try to open them and find they are completely relaxed and won't open," using a confident and firm tone.

5. Deepening: As the person struggles and realizes their eyes won't open, the therapist continues, "Good, now let that relaxation spread through your whole body, deeper and deeper."

Example 8: The Confusion Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist explains that the process might feel a bit confusing but it's all part of the induction.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist asks the person to follow a series of quick, confusing instructions, like "Look at my hand, now your hand, now back at my hand."

3. Suggestion: The therapist uses a rapid, changing pace to overload the person's conscious mind.

4. Shock or Surprise: At the peak of confusion, the therapist says, "Sleep!" or "Relax deeply now!" with a firm command.

5. Deepening: The therapist follows up with calming suggestions, "Feel yourself drifting deeper and deeper into a state of relaxation."

Example 9: The Fractionation Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist explains what will happen and ensures the person is comfortable.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist guides the person to close their eyes and then open them repeatedly.

3. Suggestion: With each closing and opening of the eyes, the therapist suggests they will feel more relaxed, "Each time you close your eyes, you will go deeper into relaxation."

4. Shock or Surprise: After a few repetitions, the therapist might suddenly say, "Now, keep them closed and sleep deeply!"

5. Deepening: The therapist continues with deeper relaxation suggestions, "With every breath, you go deeper and deeper into relaxation."

Example 10: The Magnetic Hands Induction

1. Preparation: The therapist explains the process to the person, ensuring they are comfortable and willing to proceed.

2. Focus of Attention: The therapist asks the person to hold their hands out in front of them, palms facing each other but not touching, about 6-8 inches apart.

3. Suggestion: The therapist suggests that there are powerful magnets in the palms of their hands, pulling them closer together. "Imagine there are powerful magnets in your palms, pulling your hands closer and closer together."

4. Shock or Surprise: Once the hands are about to touch or just touch, the therapist quickly says, "And as your hands touch, your eyes close, and you go deep into relaxation, now!" while possibly giving a light tap to join the hands.

5. Deepening: The therapist continues with deepening suggestions, "Feel yourself sinking deeper and deeper into relaxation with every breath, every word I say takes you deeper."

Why This Works

Rapid induction works because it leverages the natural psychological and physiological responses of the human mind and body. By focusing attention, giving suggestions, using sudden and surprising actions and immediately following up with deepening suggestions, rapid induction effectively guides a person into a hypnotic state quickly and efficiently. The techniques are designed to bypass the critical conscious mind and access the subconscious, where therapeutic suggestions can be more effectively implemented. It can be illustrated step by step as follows:

Focused Attention

Rapid induction techniques often begin by directing the person's attention to a specific point, object, or sensation. This focus helps to narrow their attention, making them more inclined to suggestions.

Suggestions

The suggestions make the visualisation effective in engaging the person's imagination and focusing their mind.

Shock or Surprise

The use of a sudden, unexpected action or command interrupts the person's usual thought patterns, creating a moment of heightened suggestibility.

Deepening

Following the initial induction with immediate deepening suggestions ensures that the person remains in the hypnotic state and goes deeper into relaxation.

Detailed Steps with Dialogue

1. Preparation:

"I'm going to guide you into a state of deep relaxation. Just follow my instructions and focus on my voice."

2. Focus of Attention:

"Please hold your hands out in front of you, palms facing each other, about six inches apart. Just focus on the space between your hands."

3. Suggestion:

"Imagine that there are strong magnets in the palms of your hands, pulling them closer together. Feel that magnetic pull getting stronger and stronger."

"As you continue to focus, notice how your hands are slowly moving towards each other. The pull is becoming irresistible, your hands are moving closer and closer."

4. Shock or Surprise:

"And now, as your hands touch, your eyes close, and you go deep into relaxation. Now!" (Lightly taps the hands together if needed.)

5. Deepening:

"With every breath you take, feel yourself going deeper and deeper into this wonderful state of relaxation. Every sound you hear, every word I say, helps you relax even more."
